

As a citizen living in South-Central Indiana, I take great pleasure in knowing that our state's Do Not Call laws are helping to protect my privacy, my peace and my quiet.

I think that it is a shame that unscrupulous corporations are seeking to weaken the right of the states - of the people - to determine for themselves how they wish to be (or not to be) contacted by interstate agencies. It would truly be a loss to the citizens of Indiana (and North Dakota, Florida, New Jersey, and probably lots of other places) to lose this right to the interest of a few poor sports in the commercial sector.

In short, I would like for the FCC to throw this petition in the trash and forget about it. Why should those of us with reasonable telephone privacy laws have to live with inferior regulatory practices just for the sake of some arbitrary and misguided notion of uniformity?

Thank you for your time,
Joseph Blaylock
